The celebration of the golden jubilee of St. Michael's parish and the rededication of St. Michael's parish, Sunday, was perhaps the most important event in the parish since its formation and was participated in not only by the parishioners but by many prominent in other faiths. Although mass was offered here since 1835, the parish was not established until the dedication of the church in May, 1881, and that was the anniversary that was dedication of the church in May, 1861, and that was the anniversary that was observed. The holy sacrifice of the mass was first offered up in Westerly in 1835, by Rev. James Fitton, a missionary priest, in the house of a railroad contractor which was situated about a mile from Pawcatuck bridge. After this visit Father Fitton included this neighborhood in his visitations and returned twice each year to offer the holy sacrifice and otherwise minister to the spiritual needs of the Catholics engaged in the construction of the railroad. But in 1837, when this work was completed, these sturdy laborers sought homes elsewhere, and in 1838, only two Catholics, John Ryan and Andrew Leahy, remained in this vicinity. There were Catholics in Westerly at an earlier period bearing the Celtic names of Murphy, Keegan and Fay.

Father Fitton continued his occas-ional visits through this section and about 1845 said mass on one occasion about 1845 said mass on one occasion in Babcock's woods, and during his subsecuent yisits for some time thereafter mass was said in the open air. Recognizing the devotion of the apostolic missionary and of his little flock to their faith, who were not averse to worship God out of doors, the trustees of the Union meeting house finally effered Father Fitton the use of the building for divine worship.

Late in 1863, Rev. Patrick Sherry succeeded Father Reilly, and five years later he repaired and emarged the church sufficiently to seat 1,250 persons. Father Sherry died in 1870; a monument marks his grave in front of the church. In December, 1870, Rev. Perhaps the most notable feature of the entire decoration is the Rose window over the altar, a genuine work of art, representing The Last Supper, which was the gift of Rev. Dr. Neale. The floor plan of the proposed new postoffice building, as received by Postmaster Charles J. Butler, is with special reference to location of lights in the work room, the furniture being placed in position at the discretion of the postmaster. The floor plan shows that the building will have an arc frontage of ninety-four feet between the tangent points of the arc. There will be thirty-six by sixty feet in difive steps besides the main platform, which indicates that the building will be of granite or marble and one story in height, perhaps in style similar to the postoffice building in Norwich. The lobby will be fifteen feet wide and fifty-two feet in length, almost as large in area as the present building, which is twenty-eight by fifty feet. The new building will be ninety-four feet wide at the front and seventy-two feet in the rear, with a depth of seventy-two feet.

The postmaster's office will be in the northwest corner of the building, with the office of the assistant postmaster directly in the rear. In the southwest corner of the building, that next the Westerly public library, will be located the money order, registry and banking departments, with the wault and stock rooms in the rear. The working room will be thirty-six by sirty feet in dimensions and will be equipped with the most modern of postoffice working appliances. In the rear of the building will be the door leading to the mailing platform, for the receipt and delivery of mall pouches, and accessible to the mail wagons. The recreation room for the carriers will be in the basement and the building will be supplied with the very best of sanitation. The plan received by the postmaster serves its purpose, but is not master serves its purpose, but is not intended to give a detailed description of the building.

The locomotive that ran off the tracks and tumbled down the embankment just west of the Westerly station, last Tuesday afternoon, resulting in the death of Engineer Beebe and injuring two firemen, was raised and placed on the rails Sunday morning by two huge steam derricks. The job was completed in less than three hours and was witnessed by a large crowd. The was witnessed by a large crowd. The locomotive weighs seventy-four tons and was completely overturned and embedded in a bank of gravel, making the work more difficult than if the derricks had a straight lift on the locomotive which was perhaps twenty motive, which was perhaps twenty feet distant from the rails and the derricks.

While engaged in the work, William

Benton of New London, a master wrecker, had the second finger on his right hand badly crushed and, after being attended by Dr. Scanlon, he went to his home.
